Donor Confidentiality

Donor Records: General Statement

Donor records are maintained by Classroom Central for each financial and in-kind contributor in the organization's donor database. All donor records are considered confidential and proprietary. The systems administrator will limit access to certain files based upon individuals' responsibilities and job tasks. While paper files containing donor information are limited, at no time are donor records to leave the Classroom Central offices. Copying and printing of donor records for personal use and the transmittal of donor information (including but not limited to credit card numbers or bank account information) to personal email addresses is strictly prohibited. Paper files containing confidential donor documents must be secured in locked filing cabinets. Any employee whose work requires access to confidential documents should ensure that files are returned to their secure location. Persons who knowingly obtain unauthorized access to confidential information will be subject to discipline, up to and including termination.
